I personally love wolves with all my heart. I find them very, VERY beautiful and majestic. I started a group called the Wolf Clan X. If you wish to join all you have to do is put "#WOLF CLAN X" in your signature, if anyone put leader of the wolf clan in there, they are lieing, I am the founder of it!!!

Wolf h8 is still welcome

I think their portrayal is dramatized and overrated and I personally don't care for them,

I don't like how they're portrayed as evil
I don't like how they're portrayed as gentle sweet creatures because they are not Mantis shrimp are cooler.

Yeah but wolves don't punch their way out of enclosures.

It's impossible to have a captive mantis shrimp for long. They just punch through the glass. Their claws move so fast they make a mini sonic boom when they strike. Can wolves do that?

Information is sent from shrimp to shrimp by polarization of light. That way, predators can't hear what they're doing. They don't need to howl, they communicate invisibly!

Human has three cones in their eyes that allow them to see color- red, green, and blue

Dogs, including wolves, have two- yellow and blue.

Mantis shrimp have sixteen. They can see colors and things that you, I, or wolves can't even imagine. The human eye can see about 7,000,000 colors. Mantis shrimp can see ten times as many.

Honestly, I love all animals. Sadly, many are dying. Hopefully humans can save them in time.

As for wolves, I don't think They are exactly "sweet and innocent." Yes, wolves if taken and human raised at birth, could be more like a dog than a wolf. However, they are very powerful, and will definitely attack if threatened. Majestic? Yes. Powerful? Definitely! Sweet and innocent? Not really. I do love wolves, as well as many animals, but sweet and innocent aren't exactly wolf adjectives.

The reason they're Depicted as evil in older tales is because they were much more aggressive than they are now. Just wanted that to be clear.

I won't bring much of my religion in here (Unless I want to XD)

Aye they are still portrayed as evil though, I know they are aggressive, but they are still like dogs at heart.

Is anyone enjoying this convosation?

@angel yes red pandas are adorable. I would want one as a pet, but they are beautiful. They're actually closer to raccoons than pandas! Did you know that?

@gamer umm I think it's the other way around. Dogs were naturally select bred by humans to retain their kindness to humans, eventually becoming dogs. They still retain wolf traits at times though.

I own a coy dog (coyote dog mix), and she retains a lot of her coyote hunting instincts, but she's still very calm around us kids. A wolf dog might retain more wolf than dog, depending on how connected the breeds are. All dogs were wolves, but not all wolves were dogs. If you mean your saying by "they won't attack on sight" then likely you are right. But if that's literal, not really.

I don't hate wolves. Nor do I totally love them. Wolves are not intelligent enough to have the concept of good and evil, and so cannot choose where they stand. This puts them, along with every animal- except for dolphins (smart enough to know good and evil), chimpanzees, gorillas, and cats(Chaotic Neutral)- as True Neutral. Yes, wolves are cool, but they aren't actually very endangered. They are classified as least concerned. There are so many more animals that are critically endangered. And I am a wolf lover, but I think that other animals should get love too. And no, wolves aren't dogs, so no, if you see one in the wild do not approach it. While dogs are descended from wolves, they have been bred to be friendlier. Wolves are not dogs, and dogs are not wolves. I do not hate wolves, they actually are my 8th favorite animal. In the past, wolves were "evil creatures" because they would kill farmers' animals so that they could survive. So in conclusion, wolves are not evil beasts, but they are also not big, fluffy doggos that will let you pet them.

i feel like I wrote a research paper.
